Ukraine regroups as Russia attacks (Infographic). After a public handshake between Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko and Russian President Vladimir Putin in Minsk on Aug. 26, hopes for peace have vanished as Ukraine and its allies say Russia has sent more than 1,000 regular troops into the two easternmost oblasts of Ukraine. <http://goo.gl/3qPznN>

August 27: Military invasion by the Russian Federation is becoming more widespread. Russia has opened a southern front and invaded the small Azov Sea port of Novoazovsk, around 50km away from the large industrial port of Mariupol, Southeast Ukraine. "War in Europe is not a hysterical idea. I realize that this question sounds hysterical, and foolishly apocalyptic, to U.S. or Western European readers. But hear me out, if only because this is a conversation many people in the eastern half of Europe are having right now." <http://goo.gl/ihcM4v>

Kuhner: Will Russia-Ukraine be Europe's next war? An article published 6 years ago: Moscow is on the March. <http://goo.gl/FGJvcA>

"The 'Ukraine crisis' is a long-planned operation. It was Russian foreign policy that has always been directed at preventing Ukraine from leaving Russia's sphere of influence. Since the annexation of Crimea in March, 'the Ukraine crisis' seems an increasingly misleading concept." <http://goo.gl/F7ZeeR>

Russia "lacks resources for Ukraine occupation", says military expert. <http://goo.gl/t7tY1O>

"The bloody crisis in Ukraine has entered a new phase, with regular Russian military forces now apparently fighting in the country's rebel-held East. Although the elements of a possible political settlement are visible, so far, the Kremlin has shown little interest in de-escalating the conflict. Instead, at every turn, Russian President Vladimir Putin has met Western sanctions and opprobrium with fresh violence. Let's admit it: The West's current strategy isn't working. It's time for new steps designed to encourage Moscow to change course." <http://goo.gl/TK5Csd>
